RANGE OF SOURCES

There are numerous sources of additional information on New Zealand's tertiary education sector. They include:

- various agencies involved in the tertiary education sector, listed later in this section, along with their contact details
- various representative bodies involved in the tertiary education sector, which are also listed later in this section
- the New Zealand tertiary education portal: www.TEd.govt.nz which provides links to most of the important sites for those interested in tertiary education
- the Ministry of Education's website which contains supporting documents, publications, statistics and links to other education-related sites
- the websites of the TEC, NZQA, New Zealand Career Services Rapuara and other agencies involved with tertiary education
- the websites of many providers which are accessible through the tertiary education portal or through the websites of either the Ministry of Education or KiwiCareers, and
- the annual reports and other information published by tertiary education organisations.

The government has a number of distinct but inter-related roles in the tertiary education sector in New Zealand. It provides resources for the delivery of education and operates as a regulator by administering educational legislation, promulgating regulations and guidelines, monitoring compliance, and monitoring the effectiveness and efficiency of educational delivery. Government policy is developed within a framework that aims to create an environment for learning as the basis for New Zealand's future economic and social wellbeing.

The following government agencies are involved in the tertiary education sector.
